CITY COUNCIL.

The City Fathers to Reduce the Hospital Expended and Clear the Sidewalk

The city council met last night at the court house regular session, with Alderman Brunner absent. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

There was a communication from Mr. C. B. Eddy, in regard to the question of digging a canal between the G. H. and E. P. & N. P. railroad. He also spoke of the bonds, and said that he had prepared them for the attorney general.

The report of the assessor and collector was then read by the city clerk and referred to the taxation committee.

The monthly report of the chief of police was received and filed.

A motion was passed allowing Judge Kemp's expenses on his trip to Austin, to be paid out of the city treasury, which is to be heard before the supreme court on Monday.

The chief of police asked the city to allow him $15 per month for the feed of a horse which he will furnish to allow the regular business of the monthly bills were brought up and allowed as follows:

There were several complaints from different residents as to the condition of the streets, the upper part of town, and after some consideration they were referred to the street and grade committee.

A communication from the El Paso foundry was read, which asked for a right of way on a certain street to connect the Santa Fe track with their new foundry. The matter was referred to the street and grade committee.

The El Paso Bill Post company asked for permission to erect and repair their bill boards in different parts of town, but owing to the question of fire, the matter was referred to the fire and water committee.

The sidewalk was the next issue to be argued, and the chief of police was heard on the subject. He spoke of the danger of having the sidewalks blocked and said that he had consulted with several of the merchants and found them willing that the ordinance should be repealed. He stated that he had the upper part of town, and after some consideration they were referred to the street and grade committee.

There was some little complaint as to the hospital bill, and the mayor proposed that a resolution be passed not allowing any of the city officers to send a patient there save the mayor alone. This resolution was passed, as also a resolution notifying the hospital to discharge all city patients now in that institution.

There being no further business the council adjourned.

THE NEW NAVY.

Chairman Boutelle's Creditable Record

In the course of his speech in the house of representatives the other day on the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, Chairman Boutelle gave some exceedingly interesting facts showing the progress made in the last fifteen years in building the new navy. Among other things Mr. Boutelle said:

"I will tell you briefly what the change has been in our navy in a comparatively few years. Fifteen years ago the 'Star Spangled Banner' was not flying on a single modern ship of war. We had not a modern armor-plated gun in the navy of the United States. We could not make a ton of armor in this country. In fifteen years, while we have not done all that we ought to have done in this direction, we have at least accomplished a notable work, for the character of which we have no reason to feel ashamed. In that period the total appropriations for the naval service of the United States—that is, for the regular expenses of the service and the construction of ships and ordnance—has amounted to $387,987,840. During that time, in the five years in which it has been my privilege, as chairman, to present to the house appropriations bills to the navy, we have appropriated $172,688,000, or almost 50 per cent of the whole amount which has been provided for this purpose in one-third of the whole period to which I have referred."

"When we come down to the increase of the armament of the navy in fifteen years, starting from a condition where we had not a single modern gun afloat, we have put afloat and authorized, including the provisions of the present bill, a navy capable of throwing at every full discharge of its guns 122,200 pounds of metal, and of that amount the ships that have been authorized by the committee during the five years of my chairmanship have put afloat, in the vessels completed and authorized, guns capable of 53,928 pounds of all around in one-third of the whole period to which I have referred."

"The number of ships shows a similar proposition. We have built in fifteen years 114 vessels of all classes, of which 37, or precisely 50 per cent, have been reported and authorized in bills originating in the committee while I have been chairman, in one-third of that time. Of torpedo-boat destroyers there have been sixty-three authorized, of which fifty-one have been in the five years specified, and the record shows that the first torpedo cruiser authorized in this country was in the same appropriation that carried the first three battle-ships in the list to congress. I may also be permitted to note that, of the four first-class battle-ships in commission today—the Indiana, the Massachusetts, the Oregon and the Iowa—three of them were provided and the twelve battle-ships to date nine have been provided, in bills that I have had the honor to report to the house."

HE FOUND THE WORD.

Miss Ruth Culberson bought her dictionary at a fire sale. It was unbridged and contained 80,000 words, printed on 1,281 pages of heavy white paper. There was no appendix of weights and measures and proper names, but, then, she paid only 19 cents for it.

Ruth laid the dictionary on the small table that stood in the center of the room, a perfect monument to ugliness, and without unwrapping it or vouchsafing any explanation as to what it was she went to her room and began to read the dictionary and began to remove the dust and cinders she always carried home with her from the downtown district.

Her mother regarded the package on the table with increasing curiosity. She felt it and lifted it and tried to tear off a corner of the paper covering, but she did not remove the wrapper.

Ruth came back into the parlor at length and sat down near the window. Mrs. Culberson looked from the package to her daughter and back again in silent agony. Presently she could endure the strain no longer.

"What did you get today, Ruth?" she asked meekly.

Ruth turned round with a wondering air, as if not fully comprehending the import of the query. Her eyes followed her mother's to the ugly center table, and, "Oh, that," she said, with a smile—"that's a dictionary."

Mrs. Culberson's dismay could not have been more complete had she been informed that her daughter had brought home a book constrictor.

"And what did you get that for, Ruth?" she asked.

"Because I needed it," returned Ruth. "It must have been pretty expensive."

"Yes," sighed Ruth. "It cost 19 cents."

Mrs. Culberson appeared relieved, but not entirely satisfied.

"It seems to me, Ruthie," she went on querulously, "that a girl who works for $10 a week, which is the only income two people have to depend upon, ought not to be spending her money for a dictionary. If you had 19 cents to spare for books, why didn't you buy three or four of those paper backed novels that would be of some interest to me, instead of a dictionary?"

The Culbersons lived in a boarding house where dictionaries were a rare commodity. Indeed, Ruth's was the only one about the house, except Mr. Winter's, which was an exceedingly small, pocket edition, that contained only the words in most common use.

But somehow as soon as it became known that there was a large dictionary in Mrs. Culberson's room on the second floor and that everybody had been given free access thereto the desire for knowledge was given a wonderful impetus.

But the person who found occasion to refer to the book most frequently was Mr. Winter. Mr. Winter was a grocer. Of course in his business he daily met with many terms that required elucidation. Hitherto he had found the pocket edition perfectly satisfactory, but after the advent of the unabridged dictionary the much worn, green backed little book suddenly lost its usefulness and never an evening passed when Mr. Winter did not refer to the new volume.

Mrs. Culberson's door and politely request to "come in and look at the dictionary a minute."

His prolonged visits annoyed Mrs. Culberson. His presence prevented her reading at night and, as he himself, seemed deeply immersed in scholastic lore, thus forbidding opening a conversation with him, the poor old lady's evenings became seasons of exquisite torment.

"I don't know what makes him come up here so often," she said pettishly, one night after he had closed the dictionary and gone away. "He is a awful bore."

"It's your own fault he comes," said Ruth. "You invited him."

"Of course I invited him," retorted Mrs. Culberson. "He invited all of them. Doesn't he annoy you?"

"No," she said softly. "I don't know that he does."

As the spring days took on the heat of summer Mrs. Culberson became more and more restless. Ruth grew younger and prettier and Mr. Winter studied still later each evening in blissful oblivion of the added heat of the gas jet.

Mrs. Culberson had long since ceased sitting up waiting for him to go, but bade him good night and went to bed in the alcove.

One evening in early June 10 o'clock passed and Mr. Winter had as yet made no movement toward going away. Ruth watched him closely, as she always did when he seemed engrossed with the words before him, and she noticed that he had not turned a page for more than an hour.

He looked up at length and they eyes met. Ruth felt her face flushing again and with the realization of her weakness the flush grew deeper.

"It's a pretty knotty problem that I have been puzzling over tonight," he said, with a sigh.

"Couldn't you find what you were looking for?" she asked softly.

"I hardly know. I found the word I wanted. Whether it will ever mean to me what I would like it to mean I do not know. Here it is. I have been looking at it a good deal lately."

He turned the dictionary around till she could read the line over which his finger rested. There was one word underlined with a pencil and she knew it was the one he wished her to see. It was "mother."

"Is that ever to be for me?" he asked. The blush had deepened into scarlet then. For a moment a look of exceeding happiness transfigured her face, but a moment later the old troubled expression was back again. She turned the leaves of the dictionary till she came to the word "mother."

"That's all right," he said, and nodded toward the alcove.

Away over near the back of the book her next answer was found.

"Ruth," called out Mrs. Culberson a quarter of an hour later, "what made Mr. Winter stay so late this evening?"

"He was looking at the dictionary, mother."

"Did he find what he wanted?" asked Mrs. Culberson.

"Yes, mother," said Ruth. "I believe he did."—Chicago News.

Prince Knog Wasn't Dead.

A Peking dispatch says: "The extraordinary official announcement was made that Prince Knog, the president of Tsung Li-Yamen (Chinese Foreign Office), who was reported to have died on Monday last, is alive. It seems that he passed into unconsciousness, and the Chinese doctor declared him to be dead, but he has since awakened. His condition is said to be still critical."
